

Talk About Counterintuitive. Chocolate that Reduces Acne?

Hot & Cool Trends

By Cari Martens

Chocolate doesn't cause acne, it cures it. Or so claims the manufacturers of new Acne Care chocolates from Frutels. While the old saw that chocolate causes acne was debunked years ago, the makers of these new chocolate-coated candies say their sweet confection really does reduce the presence of pimples.

Packed with antioxidants and micro-nutrients, the chocolates assist the body's defenses and clear up the skin from within, Frutels claims.

The company recommends a dose of two to five chocolates per day for quickest results.

Frutels' data indicates that 73 percent of people surveyed experienced improvement in their complexion after eating just two bars per day for two weeks.

A month's supply costs about $40. For more information, you may visit frutels.com.

For more insights and innovations check out neemee.com, the place to go for the latest observations in the World Thought Bank – events, ideas, trends and more. Add your own thoughts about anything in life – entertainment, design, technology, well-being and, yes, food. And, take a look at a few of our other Hot & Cool Trends.

Have you seen an innovative product that will make our food lives more fun in the future? Let us know at Editor.